To Whom It May Concern:

I am pleased to recommend Hamza S'hisseh, Alexandre Babé, Ajax Deshayes-Huet, and Nino Sacchi, students in the Master's program in AMINJ (Audiovisual, Interactive Digital Media and Games) at the Institut National Universitaire Champollion, who participated with distinction in an international academic cooperation initiative conducted between their institution and UNIMINUTO Virtual, Bogotá, Colombia.

Their participation took place within the framework of the research project CLASSLAB: Simulator for Strengthening of Professional Competencies in Educational and Pedagogical Practices of UNIMINUTO Virtual Bachelor's Degree Programs, aimed at creating a gamified simulation strategy to enhance professional competencies in Colombian educational contexts. This initiative enabled the development of an interactive digital environment focused on situations typical of the teaching profession, particularly those related to school coexistence, through an interdisciplinary collaborative process.

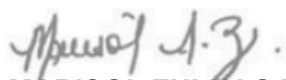

Throughout the project, the students demonstrated outstanding technical and creative abilities, evidenced in the design of characters, the construction of school environments, and the development of the dashboard and gamification mechanics. Their work effectively integrated pedagogical requirements with innovative digital solutions, incorporating interactive narrative elements that enriched the proposed learning experience.

During the different working sessions, they maintained effective, timely, and constructive communication with all participants involved. Their dedication, professionalism, and openness were essential to achieving the project's objectives and clearly demonstrated their ability to combine pedagogical, technological, and design expertise in support of a proposal with meaningful educational impact.

For these reasons, I highly recommend these students for any academic, professional, or international cooperation opportunity they may pursue. I am confident that their skills, attitude, and training will constitute a valuable contribution to any team or institution fortunate enough to work with them.

This recommendation is issued at the request of the interested parties for any purposes they may deem appropriate.

Sincerely,

MARISOL ZULUAGA

Vice Rector for Academic Affairs and Operations
